

POURED FROM A BROKEN VESSEL

You are not a mistake. You are not a failure. Your life does count. You were born for a purpose! There is not a woman alive who has not been hurt by something or someone. Some of us have been torn apart and seemingly cannot seem to get it back together again.

Every broken heart that needs to be mended, everything that has comes to hinder your walk

With God, everyone who said "that you would not amount to anything." The voices and the faces that talk about you even in your presence. The kicks to the curb that you did not deserve. The wounds that you have kept covered because you wanted nobody in your business. Well, let's step on the devil's head and let go of how things should have been. We are going to let go of the worries about what might have been and we are going to stop having "pity parties" because we have arrived at a unique place in our lives that is filled with countless possibilities. Now is the time for you to start shining for the rest of your life because God's GRACE has surely followed you through all the days of your life. His GRACE has been there all the time!

I pray that on this "brand new day" you will gain a new perspective. A larger view of your life, and a chance to watch God even greater in your life. Your life is only on hold if you want it to be on hold. You can stay in the corner. Quiet as a mouse. Coming out only when it is convenient for you ... you need to be perfected. You need to reach out and give God the praise no matter how deeply rooted your past. No matter who does not like you. No matter how bad the pain will be to face your backstabbers.

I have learned what it means for Jesus to be my everything ... my husband, lover, confidant friend, bridge over troubled waters, way out of no way, strength in my times of weakness, provider, comforter, the beginning and the end, my shield and my protector, my source of joy and my cup of salvation. He has kept me when I didn't even want to be kept.

The bottom line is that God is bigger than anything we go through. He wants something bigger for your life than you want for yourself. He can be trusted. Allow God to pour into your life oil from the broken vessel. Let Him give you that contentment that you have needed for so long. You can come out of the corner because the Lord is waiting for you. Let no obstacle stand in the way of God perfecting you. His will is far above your will. His plans for you are more important than your plans for yourself. Your life belongs to God and He can do with it whatsoever He will.

Let's stop blaming God for everything that has gone wrong with our lives. Praise Him for what has gone right. Life is real and somehow we must learn to take the "bitter with the sweet." Triumph in the Lord! I challenge you to be the "woman of God" that He has called you to be. Stay on the path of "everlasting life." You are a woman of destiny created in the image of God. Therefore, close forever the doors of loneliness, anger, regret, frustration, weariness, agony, defeat and embarrassment.

Be who you are "BLESSED AMONG WOMEN!" You are that BROKEN VESSEL that the potter cleaned up Never to get dirty again. How precious are your thoughts about me, O God!

(Psalm 139:1) Finally, after He has gone to endless trouble painstakingly completing the last detail, He stood back and admired His work of art and said, "it's good!" His workmanship is marvelous.
